

Emilie Alice Cleret is a Franco-British academic and educator, who specializes in transformative pedagogy for leaders, international affairs and the information space.

After being Senior Advisor to the President of the French Defence University, she is now Deputy Director for International Relations, Chief Academic Officer for English Studies for French Higher Military Education, where she has created and manages academic programs for both the Ecole de Guerre - the French War College - and the Centre des hautes études militaires. She is also the Director of Debate for the institution.

She has dedicated her 25-year-career to designing and launching talent development programs in English for military leadership and managing their teaching and administrative teams, forging links between France, the US and the UK, and leading international seminars on debating, public speaking, networking, talent development, transformative learning, and, more recently, on the information domain. After two years of undergraduate study at the illustrious Maison d'Education de la Légion d'Honneur, she completed her Bachelor's in British Literature and History and her Master's (dissertation on Sir Walter Scott) at La Sorbonne Paris IV, before receiving her teaching certification from the French Ministry of National Education. She taught English as a second language in the French public education system for six years before taking on a role as teacher and course designer at the Army NCO Basic Training Academy in France.

She has been the French representative to the NATO Bureau of International Language Coordination (BILC) since 2017 and manages multiple crucial collaborations between France and the US, the UK or Australia, including with RUSI, the National Defense University, the Institute for State Effectiveness, the Harvard Kennedy School, Yale Jackson School and George Washington University, amongst others.

She is a RUSI Associate Fellow, the author of multiple articles on transformative learning and has given talks on leadership, critical thinking in education, transformative pedagogy and the information domain at the NATO BILC annual seminar, Columbia University, Defense Language Institute Foreign Language Center and INFOPAC - INDOPACOM, among other venues.

She has been awarded the Palmes Académiques, an official award from the French government for distinguished service and innovation to education and, more recently, by Sébastien Lecornu, the prestigious Ordre National du Mérite.
